Project Review

During my time on Foundation I have learnt to plan and structure my work. I have learnt how to use a sketchbook and research and reflection as active parts of my creative process. I have gotten more familiar with the process of creating form out of my ideas and concepts.

I chose Fine Art 4D because I found the chance to work with media and performance informative to my self-discovery as an artist, through getting the chance to explore the limits of what my role as an artist can be. 4D has opened me up to new ideas how art is expressed in the modern world, symbiotic with a rapidly changing climate around the world - socially, environmentally, economically and politically.

I have throughout the course found interest in institutional critique - what and who is allowed in certain "rooms", and how these "rooms" changes the value or interpretation of both object and subject through imagined relation. I would further on like to explore social roles and relations between artist, institution and the audience.

Project Concept & Description

I aim to explore themes of collective myths, archetypes, hidden nature, interconnectedness, what is substantial when a sense certainty of self is put to foreign context and seems to cease to exist in that re-contextualisation of self. The relativity to meaning and truth. I aim to continue to explore social roles in relation to social institutions, through investigating the function of collective stories. I aim to bring new perspective on collective institutional stories to bring the audience as a collective closer to the artist and, hopefully, closer to each other.

I aim to incorporate ideas, elements and investigations of symbols and myths to explore secret unconscious or "esoteric" space in the structured, the mundane, the "everyday condition".

I will explore my aim of discovering re-contextualisation of self through social institution through experimentations with my own body and voice, through studying how context of environment and the social setting that follow can be expressed through the body. I will also use libraries and online resources to study artists, articles and essays through a selection of topics such as cognitive, transcendental and environmental psychology, surrealism, totalitarianism, existentialism, transcendental empiricism and post-structuralism.

Aiming to explore collective myths and interconnectedness, I will study archetypal images and myths through Jungian psychology. I will also study e.g. Sapiens by Yuval Noah Harari, to gather further information of collective myths through social institutions as a symptom of the unique human quality of imagination as a cornerstone to human communion and collective.

To research the unconscious versus conscious I will look at exhibition There, where we promenade at Freeloads Foundation, a group exhibition on how the body operates within the boundaries between the conscious and subconscious. I will also visit exhibition Fragments of Information, a Hochoul Lee solo exhibition at Daiwa Anglo-japanese Foundation on human cognitive function through the lens of a system built on standardised models derived from statistics.

I aim to experiment with applying elements of absurdity to standardised formats - bringing strange elements into the known "room" thus letting the viewer transform their experience through their personal associations with the "room" and object of the room. I would possibly do this through experiments in the public room through video and performance.

Project Evaluation

I am going to write, photograph and record daily documentation, reflection and review on my process, choice of materials, research, experimentation, development and feedback to make sure I am organising my practice in a way which will enable evaluation that will move my ideas forward. I am going to do this on Workflow and through my sketchbook.

I will experiment through active creating throughout the process, as an empirical approach to try out my concept and ideas and find the most effective way to put them into form.

I am going to do daily and weekly planning to help organise my process. I will use my own reflection combined with feedback from tutorials, crits, classmates, tutors and peers to make sure I am aware of the progression of and audiences relationship to my work.

I am aware that my aim, concept and ideas will alter through the process and I will document all alteration on Workflow and in my sketchbook to make sure it is clear what I am working on and how it is connected to both original proposal and final outcome.

I will conclude the project with writing a critical review of my project, comparing outcome to proposal and analyse planning, process and development.
